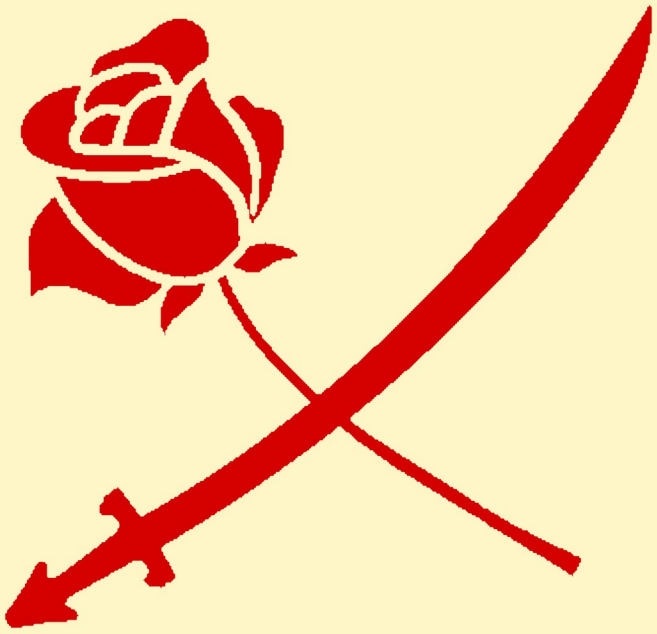
A GUIDE INTO ISLAMO-NEO-MEDIEVALISM



by Al-Baraa Al-Gheryani

Al-salaam Alikom, in this Guide I am going to explain the complicated ideology of Islamo-Neo-Medievalism and more.

At the beginning, Islamo-Neo-Medievalism is an attempt to bring back the old state structures of the old Islamic states of the medieval period (mostly from the early Abbasid caliphate till the end of the mamluk sultanate). with a decent amount of modernization to be able to function well in our times.

God almighty the most merciful has sent his prophet Muhhamed peace be upon him as a mercy to humanity. And with him he revealed his final sharia (law) to the humankind, a sharia made by the most knowledgeable on the nature of mankind and how they function. The most perfect for this dunya (world).

Logically and naturally this sharia is the most fitting for any state created by the mankind as a whole. And must undoubtedly be implemented to its fullest extent if possible. And whoever denies it or refuse to implement it wail being in a position of leadership over a state on earth, is a disbeliever in the religion of Islam and a kafir (infidel).

So following upon this.
Neo-Medievalism supports the idea of a heavy decentralized state that implements such laws. And follows an anti-monarchic technocratic-bureaucratic rule at the head of the state.
In a similar way to the Rashidun caliphate with a couple of differences that are required for such a state to succeed on this period of time.

Such as the organization of clear ministries and the existence of multi-ruling groups and factions that occupies independent spaces within the state entity, sharing different types and levels of powers that are unabsolute.

With an association of Islamic scholars being assigned to influence the streets and to translate the sharia of God into a modern constitution or a collection of interpreted laws to be implemented by the judicial ministry (which they also influence) and another class of intellectual group of Islamic figures and thinkers ruling at the top, with an imam at their heads chosen through an election between themselves with a limited consent from the public on wither the person choosen by the class should be given the position or not (modern popular bayaa). Although this is possibly limited to the beginning of the system where the bureaucracy is weak. Later on this could or could not change to be limited to a smaller class within every wilaya (province) of the state and the head of each one.

This intellectual class that will dominate the top leadership will mostly be chosen by the first group of people that will implement such an ideology.

The Top head of the government (the imam) is signed along with his class council to control and manage the majority of the ministries decentralizingly.

This is mostly the case for the top of the state, which is mostly very far from how this Neo-medievalist state will function as a whole.

This state follows a dis-unitary structure which falls in the level of decentralization in a place between federalism and confederalism. With each state being asigned a Wali (province ruler) along with a class of his to rule over each Wilaya (province) in the state. With a decent amount of autonomy in most spaces besides ones like the local military. wail having a decent amount of state intelligence watch-over to prevent any injustice or massive corruption from happening. or to replace the leadership of the wilaya as a whole in case it showed massive failure after giving it a decent time in charge.

and even tho this might not seam so far from some modern-existing political entities of our time. It also emphasizes on an anti-modern states philosophy that seeks to not limit the wealth of the state as a whole in just a couple of capitals within it. Rather it seeks to help making rural areas and small towns very influential within the economy. And along with this, this ideology also works against any form of current global control over it. From political entities such as the UN, or NATO. Its against the idea of completely independent self sovereign states that doesn't share the religious principles of Islam, nor rule with justice. Which makes it imperialistic.

This ideology also along with its religious and political / philosophical beliefs. Also got a very heavy cultural. And economical directions.

Culturally it emphasizes on the idea of Alt-modernity and what it calls "cultural-reincarnation" where it aims to bring back the old dead cultures of the old Islamic world from clothing to architecture to aesthetic to food, in a modernized way into our period to be able to function in it and spread and adopt it. Creating an alternative modernity.

The reincarnation reflects the idea of actually creating a new one that is derived from the ones of the past instead of just bringing them back to life. Economically, besides following the its concepts stated in the Quran and the hadith. Which works against usury and injustices, and emphasizes on helping the poor and who is in need of help. The ideology aims to make the budget heavily reliant on the state's own involvement and work inside its market by selling and buying, Building and renting and land-lording over its population.

althought to a limited extent in a way that doesn't ruin the economy economy for small businesses and effects the free market.

tho it still aims to have a foor in it enought to punish or change some aspects in it by just working itself instead of haing to intervene directly agianst anyone or any company for being cruel.

With this influence it aims to rely less on the outside world and stop the need to tax its population. By benefiting from them through the free market.

besides all these points that focuses on how the ideology functions in ruling the country or space it occupies.
In terms of how it wants to influence whats outside of its borders. It doesn't really aim to create a singular large caliphate that necessarily controls the vast majority of the Ummah, rather it aims to establish a united block of its self and who allies it and its puppeted political entities that can't absorb for a reason or another.

Like it functioning better as its own thing or because this move might bring chaos. It rather ultimately aims to create a united block similar to the soviet communist world, allied politically, economically and militarily against the outside civilizations of the world.
The way it views the current period is by marking it as a humiliating defeated period of the Islamic world. Where the vast majority of the Ummah is ruled by an infidel unislamic political entities that worships themselves and enslaves the Muslims within their lands to serve these idols of states.

althought something notable here is that it rejects many of the approaches some other islamist groups might take to establish their rule. it rejects the idea of being politically blind and acting without thinking or carculation of the situation especially when its in a state of weakness. so unlike a group like ISIS or AQ it aims to focus on a single place or a small region to establish its power entity first like the shias done in iran which allowed them to maintain their religious axis within the region unlike the previous mentioned sunni group, and then expand from it and slowly grow its infeluance until it becomes powerful enought to finally take over the region, ether through direct control or its proxies.

going back to the humaliated state in the islamic world, Such period didn't come from northing nor was it avoidable.
It is the will of God. That was revealed to be by his prophet when he spoke about the main periods his Ummah (nation) will go through.

The Muslims although failed miserably to create their islamic entities 99% of the times. It was ultimately destined to happen by God. And was gonna happen ether way.

And the same goes for any prophesy of Islam that might not sound positive for the Ummah. Such as the creation of Israel as well, no matter how hard the Arabs could have fought in the 1948 or 1967 wars.

such an event where Israel becomes victorious and controls the the lands of Palestine was gonna happen ether way, with us fighting well or not, with the traitors of Ummah existing or not, this point in history was willed by God, so it was gonna happen ether way.

And like it the future rise of Islam as well. Where a future Islamic entity will rise up and fight and liberate Jerusalem from the Jews and their western allies. a caliphate that will adopt to the shura system, implement the just rule of God.
a caliphate that will crush the taghutist idols of a states existing now on Muslim soil and punish the unjust.
a caliphate set in a destroyed world where most of the massive economical hubs will be in ruins. Where the current west will have been already collapsed and where east Asia is gonna be nothing from what it is now. Dead not because of lack of resources nor a massive war, rather because of the corruption existing within their societies due to curropt ideologies such as communism and capitalism that ruined those nations to their fullest.

No matter how long will it take,
the down of a new age will come and with it a glory of an entire civilization will return.
